SOME THINGS.

The influences, large and little, which underlie the politics of the country are, it is quite superfluous to say, many and various. The old Greeks were right when they said, in effect, dispersion is the life of life. We should not be too much engrossed. There is a germ of Catholicity underlying the whole fabric of human existence. "The greatest good of the greatest number" is the axiom which teaches every thoughtful mind to like that instinct of popular capacity which is the bedrock of all democracies. And right here it is to be said: Not under any stress of business and the "larger heart," but because, in spite of him, we like him, Frank Stewart has seen more actual geology than any man living of swaddled. We mean by this, that he has, with the intelligent eye of earnest self-education, observed, noted and made manifest, more practical earth-ology than anybody. He is a scout who is very willing to bring the news to the professors from the picket-lines of out-door geology. Life is very much speeded and quickened by the great, healthful winds which blow down through our canyons. One sees a noisome mass of old weeds and "trash" lying in the street waiting the torch of the destroyer, and bethinks himself of the sometime virtues of the incendiary. Then arson becomes a virtue, and the midnight assassin is a Boor in the woof of society. The town is swept clean of its streets, especially those which lie perpendicular to the plane of the landscape. These are amazingly healthful—these winds. They blow the breath of contagion out of the air and neutralize all malarial. One is reminded of "Each trivial fond record which youth and observation cherished there—in this speaking of the weather. Meantime we note that the festive legislator (Senate and Assembly), is gathering himself in. Where the cautious is there are the lobby gathered together! So saith the profane scripture. In the general run of the thermometer "things is lively." No man is accountable for the size of the wheel which runs the weather. The Moorish proverb says, "Always wrong, always right." Lowell, with his fresh fancies and handsome conceits, tells us of "God within the shadow keeping watch above his own." It is, now and again, very tiresome to hold on to the truth and see the stout and boastful liars out loose. They who have the courage of their hearts to fight with their hands are like to be true. Within the lines of exemplary virtue and beneficent activity they are not. Meantime it is a pleasure to see how wasteful of the truth are professional witnesses of the times. They are so willing to tell the truth! It is a great tribute to the larger and lesser doctrines which relate themselves to human credulity. "He who believes is lost," says the old Moorish proverb; and the Saracens repeated the proverb in their saying "The folly of life is credulity." But the Master comes in and says, "They who believe shall be saved." The decalogue is well and wisely framed. The bad habits of the earlier and more barbaric Jews made it evident to a thinker and leader like Moses that some sanitary laws were essential. The probabilities are strong that the earlier and less cultured children of Israel needed some restraining laws. Hinc illa, etc. And they made their lives bitter with hard bondage, in mortar and in brick, and in all manner of service in the field; all their service wherein they made them serve was with rigor. And yet, to this day the hunter hunteth the rabbit for his pelt; and the archer and the man-at-arms killeth the buck and the roebuck, the hind and the bear! And so the world wags on apace. But the wiser part of life is in the dwellings where temperance and continence and charity are, for thence cometh forth and is born the man child called Wisdom, twin of experience and scorn of the Scribes and Pharisees, Hypocrites. And thus, chopping our lesser and more imperfectly digested fancies into that queer mixture called the Spaniards olla podrida we leave the gentle reader to his eggs and rolls and coffee.

FATAL ACCIDENT.

We copy the following account of the death of County Commissioner L. H. Torp, of Storey, from last evening's Chronicle: County Commissioner Torp was killed yesterday afternoon, and his wife dangerously injured, by being thrown from their buggy at the northeast corner of C street and Sutton avenue. The accident occurred at five minutes before 2 P. M. The residence of the family is at the tollhouse on the Geiger grade, and has been for years the custom of Mr. Torp to drive into town with his wife every Sunday, leave her at St. Paul's Church, and call for her at the close of the services. Yesterday the usual custom was followed, and about 1 o'clock in the afternoon Mr. Torp drove up Taylor street, with his wife beside him. An hour later the startling news was brought in that he had been thrown out and was dying.

It appears that just before starting for home Mr. Torp drove into Derby & Garhart's stable and asked the men to examine the foot of one of the horses, as he feared a nail or splinter had got into it. Nothing was found, however, and he turned his team and drove out northward along B street, until he reached Sutton avenue. Here he turned, intending to go C street, his usual route homeward. Just as the turn was making from B street into Sutton avenue, one of the horses slipped, and in the struggle to keep from falling, wrenched the brass cap, or thimble, off the right end of the neck yoke. The collar-straps which hold the neck-yoke to its place are fastened one end to the collar of each horse and the other to a staple in the metallic cap at the end of the neck-yoke. So when the cap slipped off the pole of the carriage fell against the legs of the high horse, and the carriage lurched forward, striking both horses in the flanks, and frightening them unmanageable. Mr. Torp was utterly unable to control the horses, and they plunged furiously down the steep grade of the avenue to the corner of C street. Here Mr. Torp exerted all his strength and turned the team to the left. The grade was so steep and the impetus so great, however, that the buggy careened so violently that Mr. Torp and his wife were both thrown out. At the northeast corner of C and Sutton avenue, where the hapless couple were thrown out, there is one of those old amalgam retorts so commonly used for corner posts in this city—a large iron cylinder about 15 inches in diameter, with a narrow neck projecting upward. Against this Mr. Torp was thrown with such fearful violence that he lay there unconscious and never spoke again. Mrs. Torp was thrown over the retort and fell about ten feet below the corner, maimed, bleeding and senseless.

Mr. Torp was at once removed to the City Hall and laid on a hastily prepared couch. Meantime Dr. Bronson had been summoned, and within five minutes after the accident he was beside the sufferer. The doctor found him in such a condition that only a partial examination of his injuries could be made. At times there were slight convulsive movements of the body, but he never regained consciousness, and died about twenty minutes after the accident. There were no marks of any consequence upon Mr. Torp's body. Dr. Bronson's opinion is that death resulted from the shock to his nervous system, but says it is not unlikely that fatal internal injuries were inflicted. Mr. Torp was born in the Province of Holstein, Germany, and was in his fifty-first year at the time of his death. The funeral services will take place at 1 o'clock to-morrow afternoon, under the auspices of the Masonic fraternity.

Drs. Collins and Bergstein were called to attend to Mrs. Torp. They found both bones of the left leg broken above the ankle joint. The left wrist was dislocated and the thumb of the left hand broken. The nose was broken, and one side of her face badly bruised. For some time nothing could be done by the physicians, as the slightest touch seemed to give intense pain and sent her into spasms and chills. After midnight she was easier and the fractures were set. This morning it was ascertained that there were no internal injuries, and the physicians are quite hopeful of her recovery. She will be removed to-day to her residence on the toll-road. She has not yet learned of her husband's death, and the sad news will be kept from her as long as possible, as it is feared that the shock resulting from such intelligence might prove fatal.

Examination of the neck-yoke showed that the screw which was designed to hold the thimble in place was not over a quarter of an inch long. It passed through the thimble and then into the wood. Its hold in the wood was so slight that as the thimble was pulled off the screw plowed a furrow on the surface of the wood.

At 3 o'clock this afternoon Mrs. Torp was much better, and still at the lodging house where she was taken yesterday. She has been informed of her husband's death, and her sorrow seems to overshadow her physical sufferings.
